Generally, the very first step of a Chinese marriage is getting permission from parents. Once the engaged have it, then a date need to be chosen. One as auspicious and lucky as possible. The groom's family will then present a whole range of gifts (Grand Gift) representing fertility and prosperity. After all of this, the couple is officially engaged.

On the day, the two families will perform 'Hair dressing' and 'Capping' for the bride. The groom will then go to the bride's home and pick up his lady. By Chinese custom, the groom will not be able to pick up his fiancé easily. He has to play door games with brides-maids in order to attain his fiancé. This is the most fun part of Chinese weddings.

After this, the bride and groom will leave her home to meet the groom's parents for a tea ceremony. The wedding ceremony and activities will finish with a Chinese banquet-style feast.
